Course Description:

This course provides an overview of theories, approaches, and frameworks for understanding international and sub-national conflict as well as post-conflict societies. In doing so this course also discusses the role of different forms of violence, identity, and material factors in the outbreak and perpetuation of conflict taking into account state and human security, gender-sensitive, and post-colonial concerns throughout. The course then moves on to focus on conflict resolution, including the examination of peace agreements, different types of external interventions, military and non-military, while developing an analytical criterion of success in peace building which is applied to contemporary cases through the course. Finally, the course considers transitional justice and the particular issues that arise in post-conflict societies including those involving trauma, memory, and forgiveness. Case studies of civil and international conflicts, and of related conflict resolution strategies are used throughout.

Prerequisites:

Teaching Methodology:

This course will be delivered face to face through a combination of lectures and interactive sessions. In addition to classroom activities, there are guided learning elements that are tutor led and arranged through Blackboard. These activities can be asynchronous online sessions, flipped classrooms, set readings with discussion boards or set guest lectures for example. Set activities are monitored by the instructor to ascertain student engagement. Students are encouraged to prepare for class and to play an active part, to raise questions, following-up ideas and interact with a wide range of provided material.
