Course Description:

Introduces students to research methodology, key research methods, and research practices used in the discipline of International Relations, with an emphasis on qualitative methods. Students will learn research skills that translate directly into the workplace, including in NGOs, charities, the corporate sector, and intergovernmental and development agency contexts. This course also trains students for practically undertaking academic research such as that required to complete a dissertation. Students are prepared to carry out a range of methods (i.e. textual and visual analysis, interviews, focus groups, and ethnography) and learn principles of data collection and analysis. Writing research proposals and literature reviews, and pitching research are both taught and assessed, and students are introduced to widely used and newer creative and participatory modes of research.

Prerequisites:

40 Credits and LIBA 4301 Academic Research and Writing

This course is only open to International Relations Students.

Aims and Objectives:

- To introduce the concept of methodology and teach social science research methods and practices including their ethical considerations as they are used in both academic contexts and beyond

- To prepare students for fieldwork, internships, and future employment in an international research setting, as well as for dissertation writing, in part through engaging with consideration of research ethics
- To provide a background for eventual careers in fields (including work in government, international organisations, business, and the media) which require articulate, clear-thinking individuals with a grasp of social science research methods
- To provide a framework to assist concerned citizens to think critically about issues that are of increasing importance in the 21st century
- To promote critical engagement with a wide range of literature, and the development of both a succinct writing style, and the ability to present complex arguments orally
