Course Description:

At the heart of political sociology is a concern with the relationship between the state and society, a relationship that, as citizens, affects us all. This course explores the link between the people and the state in three interrelated respects: the concept of power, the theory and practice of revolution and the way politics affects the social fabric of daily life in technologically advanced, multi-media societies. In addition, a discussion takes place regarding the global significance of political and social change.

Pre-requisites: PLT 4100 or SCL 4110

Aims and Objectives:

- To introduce students to various theoretical traditions of political sociology.
- To apply these various theoretical traditions to various aspects of politics: power, decision-making, democracy, social movements and revolution.
- To look at the state-society relationship especially the relationship between the process of state-formation and capitalism, war and social movements.
