Minor in Environmental Studies

The minor in Environmental Studies is a basic introduction to the major themes in this field. The course covers basic ecology, environmental ethics and environmental science. Well known environmental issues such as global warming, ozone depletion, acid rain, pollution, and population issues are addressed from scientific, economic, politico-sociological and ethical standpoints. An awareness and appreciation of global, local, and personal environmental problems are developed, together with the implications of possible solutions. The concept of inter-relatedness is a unifying theme throughout the course.

Minor in European Studies

The minor in European Studies explores the evolution, and gradual development of, the European 'states' system. It will provide a comparative cultural, economic, historical, and political analysis of how Europe has evolved and functioned, illustrating the ways in which 'states' interact with one another within systems. It will begin with the fall of the Roman Empire in Western Europe; move through to the early European systems of the medieval period, on to the wars of religion of the sixteenth century, the defeat of Napoleon in 1813, and end with the Paris Peace Conference of 1919. This course will analyse the development of European international systems, the methods via which they were spread, and examine the elaborate rules and practices that regulate them, ancient Europe through to the modern day.
