Course Description:

Examines the questions of whether ethnicity is a universal phenomenon, and if ethnic conflict is inevitable. Investigates why ethnicity became such an important tool of political organization in the 20th century. This course examines ethnicity, and to a lesser extent religion and nationalism, as bases of social and political belonging and differentiation and sources of both creativity and conflict. Starting with the premise that identity is socially constructed, the ways in which ethnic identity has been formed and used in different societies will be examined. Different theories of ethnicity will be explored during the course, as well as specific case studies. Key contemporary issues in the study of ethnicity and identity, such as immigration and multiculturalism, are also addressed.

Pre-requisites: DEV 4100 or HST 4110 or INR 4100 or PLT 4100 or SCL 4110Aims and Objectives:

- To introduce students to the main theoretical literature on ethnicity, race and nationalism and to discuss how these intersect with other bases of identity such as religion and 'civilizations'.
- To provide students with the opportunity to explore the politics of ethnic and religious diversity in the contemporary world.
- To explore contemporary debates about the meaning of multiculturalism and the strategies currently being deployed by states and other actors to deal with diversity and social cohesion.
