Course Description:

Developmental Psychology explores the child's developing experience of the world. Major theories and issues in development from conception to adolescence are examined with a particular emphasis on the nature-nurture issue and cross-cultural studies. Topics covered include: fetal development, physical development, cognitive development, social development and personality development. Students are encouraged to actively participate in class discussion and use their own experiences to help understand theoretical issues.

Prerequisites: PSY 3100Aims and Objectives:

The course introduces students to the major theories of development and their contribution to the overall understanding of human behaviour. It will familiarize students with developmental research methodologies that the field typically employs today, and examine the biological underpinnings and physical changes that characterize child development. Moreover, it looks at the unfolding of the child's mental capacities with a special emphasis on perception, language, and emotional development. Students will be provided with the theoretical tools with which to evaluate developmental theories.
