Course Description:

This course is an introduction to phenomenology and existential psychology, focusing on the works of Merleau-Ponty, Jaspers, Sartre, Camus and Simone de Beauvoir. Beginning with Kierkegaard’s psychology of anxiety and despair, the course covers: the structure of human experience, the psychology of limit situations, embodiment and sexuality, the ontology of human relationships. Sartre’s theory of human conflict will be contrasted with Simone de Beauvoir’s ethics of ambiguity. Of special interest is Merleau-Ponty’s account of human freedom and the structure of life choices, as well as Heidegger’s existential analysis of temporality and death. The course also examines the literature of the absurd, in particular, Camus’ existential analysis of suicide and authenticity. The application of the phenomenological method to literature and films is explored and students will be given the opportunity to apply their phenomenological ideas to their ‘reading’ of a selected short film. There is an emphasis on active forms of learning, so that students are expected to read widely, think deeply and participate in class discussions.

Prerequisites: PSY 5100

Aims and Objectives:

The course provides students with an awareness of: the extent and scope of phenomenology, both as psychology and philosophy; the historical and philosophical background to phenomenology, as well as its aims, methods and basic concepts and questions; an understanding of how to pursue qualitative research within their discipline, using phenomenological methods. The course also familiarises students with key studies and debates in selected areas of the literature, thus laying the groundwork for an advanced and independent study of phenomenology. All students are encouraged to think critically about their discipline, using the phenomenological method to uncover the assumptions embedded within current psychological methods of inquiry.
